The name Aeolian derives from Aeolus, appointed by the mythological god Zeus to be the keeper of the winds — both to calm and to arouse them. He was the King of the Aeolian Islands.

Showing Pride—Arthur Clark, assistant director of the Physical Plant, and Dr. Michael Fathi, associate professor of Business, lay pine straw April 12 near the newly-renovated Jackson Hall. The Pride Day volunteer work united faculty, staff and students from across campus, as they spent time beautifying the University grounds. Pride Day volunteers spend time each semester helping to keep the campus in top condition.

This capital campaign is designed to transform those dreams into reality, through the support of alumni, friends, and members of the business community.”

The Carters are honorary co-chairs of the capital campaign, which has already raised more than half its goal, topping $6.9 million at press time. At the gala, President Carter said that he and Mrs. Carter would do their part for the campaign, and hoped alumni and friends would, too.

The Carters donated a portion of the 2002 Nobel Peace Prize Award to the Rosalynn Carter Institute, headquartered at GSW. The total gift was $370,000, announced Jan. 28, 2003. The Carters have continued to support the RCI—and the “Voices” campaign—with additional gifts since that time.

Mrs. Carter graduated from GSW in 1946, and President Carter attended GSW in 1942. Both of the Carters also hold honorary doctorates from Georgia Southwestern.

Other alumni, business leaders and friends of the University have already begun to voice their support for the fund drive.

“As a graduate of Georgia Southwestern, I have fond memories of my alma mater,” said Ginger Starlin, 2004-06 chair of the GSW Foundation Board of Trustees. “I have many family members who are also alumni. As a businessperson and concerned citizen, I have great hopes for my University’s future. We must all turn our affection for Georgia Southwestern into action, and translate our hopes and dreams for our community into a plan of support that will insure tomorrow’s students have the resources they need to achieve.”

“College is life-changing — a place where knowledge, information and experience combine to form a foundation for life,” added Lee Belford, co-chair of the Alumni Campaign. “Georgia Southwestern is that special spot students of all ages remember. For alumni who value that foundation and wish to strengthen it for future generations of students, now is the time to act.”

The fundraising drive is expected to conclude in time for the University’s centennial in 2006.
